

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Stocked trout adapting

Re: Stocked trout adapting

Author: : the_last_waltz

Date: : 2013/5/2 1:00:47

URL:

The raptors are breeding in the park?

Life finds a way.

haha

they can and will, they just need the right conditions. How else would we have wild browns and bows, and in many places, "native" brookies. Hard to say that those natives are the same strain that was here when the indians roamed, considering there was more clear cutting in the last 400 years than most of us can even begin to wrap our minds around.

It is also possible that they stocked a 5 inch fish. I have seen that before, and considered it an atrocity. Since I don't know you, I can only figure that you know what a wild fish looks like, so you are probably right on. They've been humping. It isn't like they are sterilized or they weren't taught how to. It's nature man.

btw, i have no idea about this Chester creek, location, conditions, etc