

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Who do you think is in the wrong?

Re: Who do you think is in the wrong?

Author: : wsender

Date: : 2013/5/2 10:09:19

URL:

Quote:

timmyt wrote:

Wsender, i think you have a reading comprehension issue man, go read the original case presented by the gent who started this thread, there is a lot of grey area there. That or you just only see what you want and not whats there. Either way i feel bad for you Really, did you read this. I made it big for you, in case your reading comprehension is sucking today or your blind, or whatever.

[quote]

Only bona fide residents of Pennsylvania are eligible for resident licenses. A bona fide resident of Pennsylvania is a permanent resident of this state who has a fixed intent to return to the Commonwealth when he leaves it and who maintains a permanent place of abode here. For fishing license purposes, a person may not be a bona fide resident of Pennsylvania while claiming residence in another state.

The "permanent home address" measure is a good litmus test for most residency questions. For example: a student from Pittsburgh who attends college eight months a year in Virginia is a considered a resident as long as Pennsylvania remains the student's permanent home address. Conversely, a student whose home is outside the state is not a resident even though they attend a Pennsylvania university.

Positive proof of legal residency, usually a valid PA drivers license, will be required by the issuing agent when purchasing a Resident, Senior Resident or Senior Resident Lifetime fishing license.

[quote]

It's not grey. You can't have a residence license if you're a resident of another state.