I can, but work is soon enough that I dont have the time to search and sort through my pictures and post. But I will. With that being said, am I the only person thats noticed that? Am I also the only person thats noticed the black mark that goes from nostril to nostril on native brookies? I call it their "mustache". Never saw it on a stockie, or atleast not nearly as pronounced.

I believe what I believe, but have been proven wrong before and willing to learn. I am only as sure that some of these trout arent wild as you are sure they are, and am willing to be surprised.

FWIW salmonoids all appear wild to me without question, and some others.
