My initial thought about both fish is that they are holdovers that have taken on some wild characteristics (blue spot and some red to the adipose fins). The 2nd fish may be the giveaway. That fish has a huge head and thinning body. His spot pattern certainly looks like that of a stocker. Both of their fins are in good shape, so they may have been in the creek for some time. Of course, that's all speculation because I know nothing of the stream or whether it could even support holdovers.
