Perhaps a different fly would have helped. There are some caddis in that area so swinging a dark colored wet would have been a better choice. There has been some wild browns in that area but they seem to not be as plentiful the last few years in that area by my account. also smaller wollybuggers can catch some fish and cover alot of water. Also that area gets pounded after a stocking so try another area. Upper Mt,creek above Fuller lake has wild Brookies and gets stocked once this time of year. I have done well there and also worked my but off with little results. Many fish caught are used as table fare so numbers may not be as high as some catch and release areas.
