You're lucky, I fished Penns at Cherry Run on Saturday afternoon, and saw very few fish rising. There were plenty of bugs around all afternoon, but no fish were rising too them. When I left around 6PM, I talked to a guy who did well on dries the previous evening. I think that since it was quite cold on Friday night, the fish must had been turned off. There were a lot of fisherman sitting on the bank waiting for surface action that never occurred. All that I was able to catch was one little dink brownie on a nymph.

You left too soon, as is the case most times. Sometimes you can't wait till dark for the trout to start rising, and I understand that, but about an hour before dark caddis made an appearance, followed by a great Hendrickson spinnerfall.

I was much further up in the c&r section and heads were up everywhere. Prior to 6:00 though I didn't see any risers, and there was a good hatch in the afternoon. Lot's of times though the trout only like to play during the spinnerfalls.
