Sulphurs have started here in Central PA and I have been using sulphur nymphs to great success for a couple weeks. I have been using a generic dark sulphur nymph and one of my own creation. As soon as the hatch really takes hold though, it seems like Humphrey's sulphur nymph just slays the trout.

I have yet to find a nymph that can outfish that nymph no matter where I am at (Spring or Penns) in May. Yet, I don't run into anybody else that uses it. Now I don't know a lot of people who nymph a lot, most of my family are religious dry fly fisherman and think I am a no good 'dredger' lol, but I was curious if anybody else here likes to use them?
