

---

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : smallmouth bass flies

Re: smallmouth bass flies

Author: : pwk5017

Date: : 2013/5/9 9:35:17

URL:

Quote:

dc410 wrote:

Yeah, Fishidiot is right on with the dumbbell eye wooly buggers. I started tying and fishing them last summer and really haven't fished a conventional WB since. They are just flat out fish catchers. I have done well on both bass and trout (as well as many other species). One of my favorite color combos uses the following materials:

Hook- #8 3xl nymph hook

Thread- olive 6/0

1/40 oz. red painted dumbbell eyes

Tail- dark olive rabbit strip

Body- dark olive chenille

Hackle- gray/variant strung rooster saddle - sometimes I reinforce it with light wire for durability.

Fish them any way you want and HANG ON! The takes are generally not at all subtle. Good luck.

Post a pic of that sucker! It sounds pretty sweet. I prefer rabbit strips over marabou, which is why i have been fishing more zonkers and slumpbusters than WB's. A black slumpbuster in sz6-8 was my top producer last year.