I fish this stream and no doubt in my mind it holds beasts like that. There is a large damn just upstream from your pic location so I don't think they get much further up than that. I know some of the water downstream for the next mile or so gets 6+ ft. deep though and is heavily shaded and boulder chocked.

I was posting some smaller brown pics to friends on another site and quickly recieved two pics of other friends with brown of the size in the first pic. They were caught well downstream.

It's north of pottstown on rt 100.

for what it's worth I think those locals moved the trailer and are actually sort of making an attempt to clean up that location in your pic.
