There are some very very deep sections between their pics and mine though. I was wading it around dusk the other day and working a bend followed by a very deep long pool and witnessed some amazingly large strikes on the surface. I don't doubt there are some monsters in there, especially from my friends pics. Maybe I'll ask em if they mind if I repost here without giving up any location. My pic already has a notable structure in it anyway but ya kinda have to be a local to drive over that anyway.

My friends worry about it becoming known but I've never been one to hide a honeyhole. Besides I see maybe one fisherman on this mile long section of the creek per week if that. It seems more popular in the winter as funny as that seems.

I'm surprised OP's buddy isn't catching cars on that section as there seems to be an accident on that turn every other weekend.

I'm gonna be hitting it more in the next couple weeks, tonight included, so maybe I'll put up anything worth taking a picture of.
