Being that you list your location as Bucks Co, in my follow-up comment below I assume that you were fishing a trib to the Delaware. There are one or two relatively large year-classes of young, sub-legal stripers in the river system right now. They will show themselves in even greater numbers as the river warms over the next two weeks. I would not be surprised if all tidal tribs of moderate to large size will have good populations now through August or early September. The fish may even move a short distance into non-tidal water on the tribs and the tidal and non-tidal river will be full of them this summer, at least as far upstream as upper Bucks Co. I am curious from a fisheries manager's standpoint, did you find these fish in tidal or non-tidal water? Feel free to PM me.
