

Subject: : Fly Fishing Locations

Topic: : Falling Springs Branch

Re: Falling Springs Branch

Author: : The_Sasquatch

Date: : 2013/5/18 10:23:36

URL:

You know, that's the draw of the CV. It'll kick your arse, you hate it, but then the next day all you can think about is how you can beat the streams. The first time I took my dad to Big Spring, he got rocked. That's rare for him. He's a master on freestoners, but never fished limestoners like that before. Taking a skunking was tough on him. I managed a beautiful bow, and he said he never saw a fish like that in his life. We drove home and he was pissed. The whole way home, he talked about what a waste of gas and time it was...

The next day I was over at his house w/ my wife and kids, and the first thing he started talking about was how he was going to approach that stream the next time we go. It worked, as he caught a couple of the brookies (harder than the bows!) the next trip out.

Scuds, cress bugs, and sculpins, dude. In the heat of summer, you can use beetles and such (at least, that's what Sal has told me...I haven't been to the CV in the dead heat of summer), but generally its not a surface game out there. I constantly get my arse kicked on those streams, though, so don't put a lot of stock in my "advice" haha!