This is good material and a good question for a new angler to try to clarify. I dare say even the top rated entomologists are not entirely sure they have the variances in emergence behavior down pat. I sure don't.

Some clever and enterprising angler graduate students will someday take advantage of the recent explosion in underwater video tech that has become affordable and and teach us some things. It's been done to a limited extent, but not very systematically. All in the name of science, of course.
