

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Fish Travel

Re: Fish Travel

Author: : krayfish

Date: : 2013/5/21 20:59:18

URL:

I wasn't familiar with the story of a tagged fish from the Lehigh ending up in the WB. Is that even possible? I know the NY DEC radio tagged fish for a study. I think it was back in the late 90's. I believe they documented fish migration from the lower sections of the main stem all of the way up into the Beaverkill. I think a few fish made it as far as the fly fishing museum on the Willowemoc. Swimming up the Beaverkill would suck! It was like it was one fish per year doing it but a fairly large number of fish were moving that route every year. I think fish are more transient than we would like to believe. If you told me there were large pods of trout that roam the Susquehanna and then move 60 miles up feeders for cold water during the summer.... I'd believe it.

15 miles of main stem + 15 miles of EB and then 20+ miles of the Beaverkill.