That stream has been through a lot. In the flooding of 2010 it took a good beating (as did one of its tribes). That's a stream that could use a little care. Its in a sandstone rich area, so silt can get pretty heavy. Its banks are getting wider and wider. It really only needs a little structural care. It wouldn't take much. We found some structural improvements that a fishing club did in the 60s (that part is not in the video), and even that little work made a big difference as far as habitat goes.

It has great hatches, it has natives and wild fish, it's spring fed so it stays fishable year round, it just lacks structure.

All that video needed yet was me catching a lightening trout on a size 10 HE...THEN it would be a complete example of fishin' w/ Squatch!
