Heck, give it a try.

I chop up and rejoin fly lines and shooting heads (and fly rods) all the time. It's fun to experiment. Can't say that my Rube Goldberg gear has ever worked better than the original design.....but it has allowed me to recycle parts and line sections and has often produced satisfactory results while saving some money.

Experiments like this, although they may wreck some perfectly good lines, really help with one's insight to how rods and lines perform.

Do it, and then tell us the results.
