Reminds me of the time I walked into a local lumber store. It was only my second time in there (I was new to the neighborhood). One of the employees says to me from a distance, "shouldn't you be at Walmart?"

WTF?

I turned around fast enough to see his huge grin turn to a completely stunned look. AWKWARD! At that point I was the one grinning when I realized (or assumed) that he must have mistaken me for somebody he actually knew. I'll admit that for an instant I felt stunned and insulted, but that look on his face was priceless so I shrugged it off and bought some things. He actually turned out to be quite helpful (after I gave him an appropriate amount of grief) I am a fairly regular customer now but I usually try to get one of the women to wait on me.
