I have some large divider boxes. I have one for caddis, one for spring hatches (hendrickson, blue quill, march browns), one box for summer hatches (sulphur, cahill, trico, iso), one for bulk nymph storage and one for olives and various junk. I think I got the boxes at harbor freight for $3-4 each. Yes, the flies start out the season sorted by pattern & size. I keep a few small boxes in my vest where I rotate flies depending on time of year. Without fail, I take the sulphur box when going trico fishing, march browns when the olives are on and when I do have the correct flies along, I can't find the pattern I'm looking for until I get back to the car. That's fishing.
