I've used Camp Dry as a pre-treatment on flies in the past. I found that it made a huge difference and the pre treatment with CD was actually a better than on-the-water treatment with Gink. As pcray says the fly will be easier to dry off also, MUCH easier. The CD did, however, matt down peacock herl and discolor floss and fine dubbings. The underlying thread color showed through a lot. But the pro's outweigh the con's. You may want to consider how you want to fish a fly before treating it.
