Well DJBerg, I really like the music and think it fits the content. I also like the content, the purpose of the video. Obviously the Allegheny area, and a day spent there.

Just a couple tips for your future edits. First, its a lot easier to watch short clips then it is to watch somebody carrying a camera down the sidewalk for even 15 sec. It becomes a little more interesting if you cut the clips say every 3 sec, then skip 2 sec, then cut back in for a couple sec. Even more entertaining if you sync the cuts with the beats of the music.

Pay closer attention to videos you really like. You'll pick up different shots, and see how long the individual clips are in that vid. Different effects also that you like to use in your vids. I like that you cut back and forth with the b&w and color segments in your vid. Little things like that make videos more entertaining.

I don't know anything about Lightworks or what all you can do with it to your videos. I've used Premiere Elements, its fairly cheap and you can splice clips and there's lots of effects to experiment with.

Just keep making videos and striving to keep improving them. Your first ever video edit really shouldn't be your best.

Overall good job and thanks for posting it. Any questions for me just ask.
