Ken,

I agree.

These brookies in MA, ME , CT, NY and Long island are more visible because these small streams dump straight into the sea, whereas in PA the brookies are in creeks, two or three tribs away from the coast.

The current issue over the Fire Island breach is a case in point - the EBTC plus the SRBTC and various other environmental groups fought and are fighting to keep the breach open, because the fresh water is clearing a polluted stagnant bay.

scientists have already noticed that the water there is now crystal clear (good for sight fishing for stripers) and that bodes well for the three small streams - the connetquot, patchoque and carmens rivers that used to hold brookies.

the connection is direct - its much harder for folks to think about a stream up in SCPA and the rivers its a tributary to imho.
