The rail tunnel at POE PADDY is the one that's closed. Where you go over the walking bridge and through the tunnel, to pop out on the other side of the big U and access the C&R water. Can't go through that tunnel.

If you go up into the camp yard to the left, there is a marked trail which goes over. I did it. It's not that much of a butt kicker, not really that high, and didn't add more than 10-15 minutes to our hike. It is steep and rocky, though, and a little tricky to do by flashlight at night on the hike out. Also a little dangerous, as there are spots if you slip, you take a slide, and then a straight down drop with a hard landing in front of the tunnel entrance!

You could also get to that area from below, or by finding a place to park near the mouth of Swift Run and walking down. But with a bike, from below is probably your only option, and that's a LONG drive around.
