

Subject: : Beginner Forum

Topic: : Frustrating weekend

Re: Frustrating weekend

Author: : PennypackFlyer

Date: : 2013/5/29 16:13:35

URL:

One of the reasons why I use a dry fly as an indicator is because it has a much softer landing. Even then I see trout spooked off from time to time. Also, I will walk much slower through a creek/river when the water levels are low and water is clear. I perceive that the trout can sense my presences. Even then I will cast as far upstream as possible.

I know last weekend was pretty cloudy....Saturday's water levels were somewhat high and stained out at Neshimany, caught a nice 15" SMB but no trout.

If a thunderstorm or cold front recently came through I find it takes a good 12 - 18 hours before the trout become active again.