

---

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Silly carp, youre not a salmon

Silly carp, youre not a salmon

Author: : mute

Date: : 2013/5/30 22:39:51

URL:

Just a little video observation i took. Wanted to get other fishermans opinions and thoughts. Every year around this time at my local carp fishing spot this happens.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=P6AWPgh\_9Fs&hd=1

Basically if you look about midway out theres carp trying to swim up the dam, every now and then one makes it. Whats troubling is it seems theyre more interested in doing this then feeding. Ive witnessed some 40inches and 20lbs easy. Years ago i would hook up with a carp every 20-30 minutes. 3 or 4 carp in an hour wasnt unheard of on super good days. Im not sure whats changed since then but since 2012 the fishing has been slow. Since ive went out twice this year starting a week ago id get a fish on around 5PM within 10-15 minutes, and then nothing for the next 2 hours. I believe alot of fish went down stream \ up stream since we had that flood 2 years ago. They used to be lined up by the hundreds all the way across this thing, now days id guess id spot 50 or so at any given time.

Id think maybe theyre too occupied with spawning, buit theyre not in the shallows thrashing around, they just all sit at the end of the dam there and occasionally all start trying to go up, then dissapear for 20 minutes, then all at once try again, etc.