As a naval officer Carter was assigned to a nuclear cleanup task which convinced him that the risks were not worth the gains. He maintained this perspective once elected President. He influenced US regulations on the power industry that effectively ended nuclear power. He also traded some promising nuclear technologies away in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

He was educated as Nuclear Engineer so his concerns were certainly valid. I just think we would have been better served if he allowed some leeway to improve processes and technologies over time.
