I guess I usually fish somewhat difficult places that I should be avoiding. Its very tough for me to catch anything. So today a friend was driving up to Tioga County to pick up some lumber. I went along for the ride. When we got there, he dropped me off at another friends camp while he went for the lumber. I made a path through a couple hundred yards of forest until I reached a stream. The very first thing I saw on the stream was rising fish. Everywhere. They basically took anything I cast at them, however it drifted. If I put a fly on the water, they went for it. It was the complete opposite of normal. Like the twilight zone! It was 4 hours each way, and I got to fish for about an hour. But it was so worth it.

The stream is stocked about a 1/4 mile downstream from where I was, but I think these were natives?
