
Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Which mid level waders?

Re: Which mid level waders?

Author: : jdaddy

Date: : 2013/6/3 16:30:23

URL:

Quote:

jhedge wrote:

Yeah thats kind of what I've come to the conclusion of as well. The cheaper they are the less time they last however they all have a limited life expectancy. I'm looking at a set of waders and boots from cabelas for $200 total. Its in my price point and have heard they are good about replacing malfunctioning items even a few years later with no issues. I think I'll start there and maybe in a year or two have a little more money to spend on a nicer set. I live close to llbean and cabelas so I'll check them both out. Thanks again for all the help!

Cabelas customer service has gone through a pretty strong transformation in the last couple years and unfortunately it's for the worse. It seems that most people in this thread are highly advising LL Bean due to their lifetime unconditional warranty. As Gfen pointed out, it really is that easy to walk in and then walk out with a replacement product should you have an issue.