

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Flying w/fly fishing equipment

Re: Flying w/fly fishing equipment

Author: : jdaddy

Date: : 2013/6/3 22:07:33

URL:

Quote:

Foxgap239 wrote:

I did this about a year ago and I checked everything in a locked suitcase except my 2 piece rod. I carried that on and put it in the front compartment where the flight crew stores their bags and they never had an issue. I now just leave everything with a friend out here in CA and get it from him when I fly in. I will caution against checking anything such as any flammable type of fly floatant.

I agree with exactly what Jdaddy posted from the TSA. I never had an issue with them. I flew out here (I'm there now 😊) Saturday though and brought refills of frog's fanny in my carry on. Doesn't the TSA setup shop to randomly check bags as we board. Fortunately I didn't get chosen although I was thinking how to explain powered fly floatant to a TSA woman. LOL a locked suitcase is a good recipe for a suitcase with a broken lock unless you have a tsa universal lock.

EP, who would dare besemerch my hard earned reputation by calling me a good guy! Jeez, some people will write anything online!