I've never had much luck with the alcohol method of finding leaks. Especially if the leak is in the neoprene booty or on a seam.

I've almost always been able to find the hole by filling them with water. You just have to make sure the waders are thoroughly dry before doing it. And sometimes you have to hold them for awhile until the water bleeds through.

I also like to do it outside on a sunny day - the bright light really helps show the leak well.

Good luck
