Luckily I have a picture of it. Although not a great one with the glare coming off the fish. The camera man stunk (yea, that was me)! But you can see that it's a brookie by the fins. And I think 10 inches is pretty accurate.

I think i only caught a couple bows. Both were right below the pump house bridge. There were bigger trout in that hole, but only the lil ones weren't spooked when I triggered a small landslide climbing down to the hole. They weren't wild, and they were of similar size to the smaller browns.

Oh yea, both brookies were caught in the project area. And no it wasn't right above the Ol Tressle.

Has anyone seen the Beaver below the tressle? Never saw him before, but he sure did give me a spook. For a very brief moment I thought I was looking at the biggest trout South of Erie! And if there were trout in the area, I don't think they were coming out from wherever they were hiding for a long time.
