In the early part of their adult life, they make a lot of noise, but don't fly much, so don't hit the water much.

After they are around for awhile, in the later part of their adult life, they start flying more and hitting the water. That's when the fishing turns on.

In the early part of the "hatch" is the time to scout around and find where there are cicadas near the streams. Preferably streams with big carp!
