Perhaps.

The 1987-2004 brood we had here in the SC started on May 14th in Adams Co and was over by mid June.

There may be some variance this year due to colder springtime temps.....but if there were going to be widespread cicada emergences across eastern PA this year, as was forecast, they would be out by now.

A diligent cicada chaser might be able to find some good fishing in very limited spots this year. I'm thinking some of the Dauphin County bugs may yet find their way into the Susky as the bugs become more active over the next few days.

However, widespread cicada fishing opportunities on the big name waters in eastern PA are almost certainly not going to happen - the time window has come and gone.
