

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Dry Fly Question

Re: Dry Fly Question

Author: : lestrout

Date: : 2013/6/9 13:23:05

URL:

las - in some situations, eg Cairn's Pool on the Beaverkill, locals call hammering a single spot with one fly 'pounding them up'. Gearge LaBranche wrote about creating a hatch in this way. Maybe stockies respond to this better than the warier wild trouts.

If you have located a trout in a feeding position, but one that hasn't come up yet, you can 'condition' the fish. The late Charlie wrote in a New England mag about this after I did this for him in a March Brown hatch, when the flies were still starting to emerge. I ran a conventional Catskill MB over him a few times, then gave Charlie one of my MB emergers and then gave him my spot. He got the 17" good 'n proper, except that his rod broke while landing it, which he did anyway. I figured I conditioned the brute to thinking March Browns with my dry.

Another method is to do a switchup once the trout takes a shot at your fly but misses.

tl les

hp les