
Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Fallfish vs creek chub

Re: Fallfish vs creek chub

Author: : dc410

Date: : 2013/6/9 20:53:22

URL:

Jeremy,

Here is a photo of a fallfish and a creek chub. The fallfish is a decent sized one that I caught last year but it is very common to catch smaller fallfish that are similar in size to some larger chubs. You probably won't find many photos of creek chubs floating around on this site but this one was colored up pretty nice and I am kind of glad I took a photo of it after I saw that you posted this thread. When creek chubs get a bit larger sometimes they lose the darker lateral marking that is often mentioned in the description of the species. Generally you will catch creek chubs on smaller flies (I think the one in the picture I caught on a #14 black fur ant - wet). You won't catch many Creek Chubs on a size 4 deep Clouser minnow like I was using when I took the Fallfish.

Suckers are Suckers! I think you probably got those figured out 🎁

Attach file:

 Fallfish.jpg (29.79 KB)

 Creek Chub .jpg (29.58 KB)

