I keep telling myself that because of the air space between my hip boots and my leg, that a bite won't actually make it to my leg.

I'd rather have that airspace than not, but certainly don't think it's foolproof. The bigger ones have LONG fangs.

Nothing is foolproof. Even the snake gators, like turtle skins, only cover up to your knee. Many actual bites are hand bites when the person was climbing up steep hills or ledges.

There are degrees of "safer", depending how much effort you want to put into it. There's no such thing as completely safe.
