Yeah, but that's one of the two places where the people are in this state. Central PA might have the fish but it can be tough to convince folks that they need to drive 2+ hours to learn how to fly fish. SWPA might not be the best place to find trout, but it's probably a decent place to find new business.

I see your point, but if you look at his website, he seems to be focused on positioning himself as an international instructor and guide, hosting trips to Labrador and South Carolina with classes all over the country but focused on the east coast, including Lancaster, State College, NJ, MA, VT. In fact, the only local class is one of the few that's not FULL yet. So he's not so much a local draw. Just a bit odd location I thought. But who knows, maybe there's personal reason. Ha! Maybe he likes the impossible challenge of consistently catching trout on the Yough!
