I'd like to fish Yellow Breeches, Letort, Big Spring, Spring Creek, BFC, and maybe some other streams including wild brookie streams but like I said conditions and temps will decide. I figure the spring creeks will be ok temperature wise. Might hit some lakes and warmwater rivers if I have time.

So, in terms of hatches, and just the fishing in general what should I expect at the beginning of July?? I guess I should be stocked up with various nymphs and terrestrials? And maybe toss some streamers in the low light periods? Thanks

Sounds like you have a great trip planned and a heckuva lot of choices. I'll speak for the Cumberland Valley streams (FWIW). Yes, you'll want terrestrials. Hatches are always a bit touch and go down here in the SC and early July is probably too soon to expect tricos or white flies. It will be a terrestrial game. I find that ants and inchworms work well in June but you get diminishing returns with ants as the summer progresses in my experience. Streamers at low light conditions can do very well. For Breeches, it will probably fish best in the am as this stream does get warm. Letort, Big Spring and Falling Spring will be cold and will fish fine regardless of how hot the weather is. They do tend to fish bets on dark days.

Also, if you head from the Cumberland Valley toward Centre County (or vice versa), you might want to stop and fish the Juniata River for WW species.
