I have to wonder why the water is low on Penn's, and how it got that way so quickly. There's been plenty of rain this spring, and the last time I was there (5/30) the stream was carrying a healthy head of water, with good levels and flow.

I also found the water levels to be low at Big Fishing Creek, which I fished on 6/7 (a total skunk-out, unlike my experience at Penn's over the past few weeks; I saw very few bugs on BFC, and the few fish I saw in the flat pools were ultra-spooky. As for the riffles and runs, they seemed deserted...fishless.)

Just how much rain does it take to recharge the springs and keep the water levels up in these creeks, anyway? It's only June.
