I'm not real surprised that someone would base themselves in that area.

Fishing on the yough river is just getting better and better from what i've experienced down there lately. There aren't very many other large streams in the state where you can find trout rising to insects in 50 degree water all summer long - no matter how hot it is.

Throw in the great brookie fishing in the surrounding laurel highlands, and it's a pretty good spot to be IMO.

I have a retired friend who lives right along the little juniata river from april until through october. And even though it is one great trout stream for sure, the fishing does get slow on it during the heat of summer. And I was telling him that I'm better off fishing the yough river at that time of year. And he agreed with me.

I really don't think we have it too bad here in SW PA
