I am very conscious of where I step or place my hands. In addition to the normal precautions, I use a staff to move brush out of the way to see where I step, as suggested above. I also use the staff like a cane used by a blind person; I bang the staff into bushes, rocks, logs that lay in my path where a snake may be hiding. I do this in an effort to startle any snake and scare them off or provoke their warning to alert me before I step too close.
