There are hundreds of places one can bass fish in central PA. Broadly speaking, I'd stick to mid to larger rivers if water levels are decent after the recent storms. The Susquehanna is really pushing upstate and probably would not be a good choice. The Juniata is currently at mid 5' range which is on the high side but probably fishable. If it were me, I'd avoid creeks for bass until a bit later in summer.

The lakes will probably be getting more pressured by the hard core bass guys however, you might find better water conditions at some of the smaller lakes in state parks that allow only electric motors.
