

---

Subject: : Fly Fishing Locations

Topic: : Switzerland

Switzerland

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2013/6/14 9:03:16

URL:

Alright, this is pre-mature, but a slight possibility. Looks like I'll be going to Switzerland for work, likely in mid-July, and that much is fairly certain.

What I don't know is how long I'll be there, who (from work) will be going along, how long I'll be there, whether I'll have any time for "fun", whether I'll have a rental car or be chaeffered by others, where I'd be flying into, etc. In other words, the possibility of making a fishing trip is perhaps a long shot. But when those details get ironed out, it's going to happen quickly. So having a little bit of background would be cool, in the off chance that I do get to put together a fly fishing excursion, so that I could put it together quickly. And if I don't, it'd still be cool to know a little so that I can daydream about it during my travels!

The final destination (where the meetings are) is La Chaux-de-Fonds, which is on the western (French) border, WNW of Berne.

Any info would be helpful, including not only streams and watersheds, but also the basics, like what are the streams like, what species, what to expect in July, how do you obtain a license and what are the rules, are guides easy to find, do you know of any websites to do a little research, etc. I really have no idea at all how the fishing scene works over there.