Also in State College there are some brookie streams worth trying. Check the Class A Wild Trout waters list for either location to see what is out there too.

Last time I was out in Centre county I did check out a couple of Class A brookie streams but was overall kinda dissatisfied. I mean I caught fish and all and enjoyed myself, but I've fished much better non-class A's (not in Centre though). I totally understand that the populations fluctuate though, and it's probably been a while since a lot of these streams have been surveyed. The brookie fishing I do do this time around I think I'll just pick some random blue lines in a likely brookie area and explore a little. That's more fun anyways.

I also want to check out some of the Class A brownie streams around State College though (I assume these are mostly limestoneers, especially the ones in the Spring Creek watershed?)

Pa sure does have the streams though, no doubt. An embarrassment of riches.

Yep. For trout (except steelhead) I find myself fishing in PA most weekends. This weekend I'm planning on fishing (if it's not blow out) one of Ohio's BEST trout streams, and it's still not all that great at least compared to PA streams. The non-resident license is well worth the money, and I'm fortunate to live within an hour of a bunch of decent stocked streams, and not all that far from wild streams.
