On the breeches during the whitefly there are always hexes hovering like small birds. Its always enjoyable seeing that many big bugs in the air but fishing to them is futile. Sometimes slapping a big spinner down will garner a strike but its not very productive.

And I am not sure when they actually hatch but I cannot say that I have fished an "active" hex hatch. Who knows they may hatch at night too.

Now on the Susky I've seen them on the water in the evening floating by like sailboats. but thats a warm water stream in August...(80's) I am pretty sure it may be different in a cooler stout stream.
