I had a tcx and it was great.....if you were casting 60' or further. Other than that, didn't care for it. In all fairness, I didn't overline it and try it that way. I still have a z-axis which I believe was the best sell rod of all time. It was labeled as 'very fast action'. I didn't think so. It doesn't feel like much more than a medium action to me. It's #2 or #3 in the batting order for me. Maybe I should try a one since it sounds like it's somewhere between a z-axis and a tcx.

For the record....no beard, don't drink pbr and after my last experience, I think you know what I think of the entire Philly area.
