People judge how "good" of a fishermen you are in many ways. Many measure it as technique. If two fishermen are presented with the same exact circumstance, who is more successful? And I agree, that's part of it.

But WHERE AND WHEN plays a great deal in separating the successful from the unsuccessful. Some of that is luck. But a lot of it is KNOWING where and when, and that's what makes a consistently successful fisherman. In tough situation, where an average fisherman catches 1 and a good fisherman catches 2, the "better" fisherman knew it'd be slow there on that day and went to a place that would fish better.

Setting yourself up for success is a skill in my eyes. And once you have the physical skills to at least be in the game, IMO, it becomes perhaps the most important skill.
