Like that is going to happen.

How many of you have really gotten into the backing other than with king salmon or something like that where you aren't using your regular trout rod.

And if you did, what's up with that much yardage?

Even with steelhead, I have never had one in the backing a Couple came close though.

I once caught a 40+ lb carp with 4X tippet and I had no backing. Was using an old bamboo rod and an automatic reel, and there was no room for backing. Of course I had to do a lot of walking. Very shallow lake.

Backing is mostly just to increase the diameter of the spool or provide extra weight to help balance a real fly rod.

Somebody had to say it.
