Although the trout streams down here in the southcentral have had good flows and good temps this year.....this is a good reminder that things can (and almost certainly will) change over the next month.

Most years, around mid to late June, I like to get some trout for eating. Many of the ATWs in my neck of the woods lack coldwater refuges and have very few or no wild trout. Virtually all the stocked trout will die off by mid summer. Usually about this time of year, with warm days approaching, I find that trout are pretty inclined to eat in the morning and I'll take a creel and keep a few.

Once I've got three or four stocked trout on ice.....I usually go bass fishing (and release the bass).
