The Little J has been pretty tough the last few days. While water temps are still relatively low, the fishing has been a little slow. I was down Thursday evening and hardly avoided the skunk. Rises were very sporadic. The high sun and clear water is making it tough. Try to stay in the shadows. The fish are staying low and nymphing was most productive for the guys I talked to. Up near the quarry was most productive for me. There is a pretty good canopy over the river there so it makes sneaking around a little easier.
