Actually, the dam has the capability for far more water storage, and also different release levels from the dam.

Increasing the level behind the dam could greatly increase the cold water storage, and allow controlled cold water releases when needed most.

Convincing the A.C.E. to do this is the problem - they are all about flood control and white water releases, with fishing friendly releases being the lowest priority.

The LCFA, LRSA, and others are working hard to change this mindset, and there's already been an improvement. It can surely get better, and the more the A.C.E. hears from concerned fishermen, the better.
